Well done - so great to hear your podcast! Very engaging and good quality audio too!

Thank you for the shout-out. 😊 The episode is brilliant. I love the use of film and TV is used to explain the importance of recordkeeping and the principles that support it. If you have 15mins its well worth listening too.

It was really good. I recommend everyone invest 15mins of their time to have a listen.

Grabbed the chance to listen to this today...a great and fresh approach to getting an important message across. And the extra connection to other business streams is awesome

Love the reference to Business Continuity as well as information about the importance of records in the podcast.

I find the Who Do You Think You Are show very interesting, both from the stories they tell and the fact that it involves records and archives. Often they're uncovering family secrets, and it's the records that give them the answers and honesty that people wouldn't/couldn't provide.

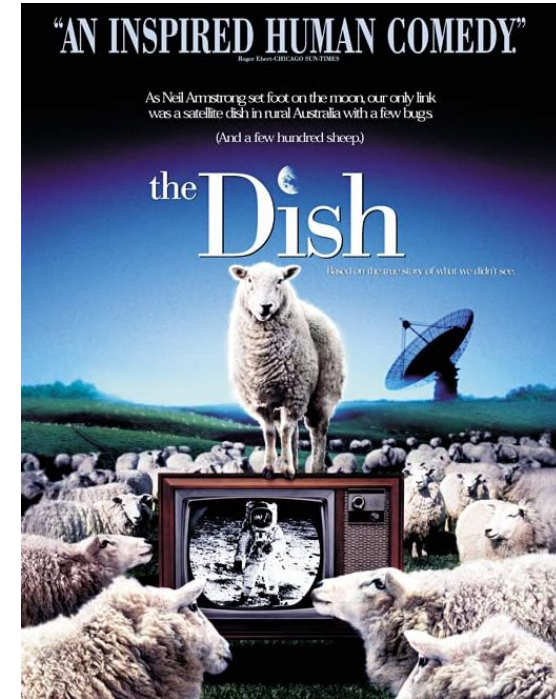

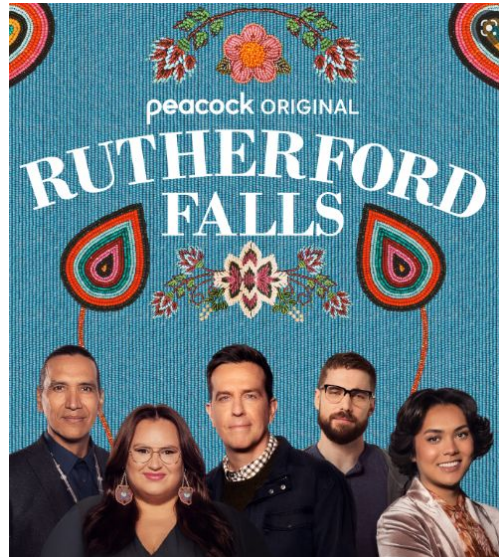

I think for me the most classic 'follow the records' story has got to be covered by the 'Erin Brockovich' movie which is based on a true story. But there's also a records and archives and justice element in 'In The Name of the Father', as someone is accidentally given the wrong file and that sets them off to uncover records that had been suppressed that were key to a criminal case. The smoking gun is always in the records!
